“ There is nothing more honorable than a man who loves, supports, values, and defends his family without question or fear in his heart. Even though I didn't know John or had a chance to ever meet him I know without a doubt that John was an honorable man who loved, supported, valued, and defended those he loved every day he was alive even unfortunately with his last breath of life. I will never forget the night I met his family as he laid only a few feet away, what I witnessed as I looked around at a family coming together agonizing in tears asking why must they lose the man they all loved, and all I could think quietly to myself was how lucky they were to have loved him and been loved by him in return. He had given his last breath defending his family and I even found myself with tears running down my face yet my heart was full knowing that his family had known his love, his wife had known true love in her lifetime, and they had all be blessed to have felt or even just witnessed that love. I too have that kind of love and I pray those out there reading this either have or find the same while allowing John's memory regardless if you knew him or never even met him to influence you all to be an honorable human being by loving, supporting, valuing, and defending those in your life who matter the most to you regardless if you or they are perfect or not there are perfections in the imperfections for the heart that's meant to love you and meant for you to love in return. To his family know that me and Jeromy send our deepest condolences to you all.

“ John was my brother from the time I was 8 years old. We had a love/hate relationship with one another, and when we loved, we loved hard and when we hated, we hated hard. But in the end, no matter what, he was family and I loved him. He will forever be missed! #RIPJohnBoy
